CHECKOUT

The choices you make

You make choices every day. You choose how to spend your time. You decide what snack to eat. You also choose how to spend your money. But every choice you make means you're missing out on something else. That's called an opportunity cost.

Here's what we mean

Let's say you spend $20 on a new book. You could have spent that $20 on other things. You could have bought a poster for your room or a new game to play. But reading has more value to you than a poster or a game, so you bought the book.

The opportunity cost of buying the book is having a blank wall in your room and fewer games to play. To you, the new book is more important. It's worth the opportunity cost. There's an opportunity cost to reading these words right now. You could be doing something else—like watching cartoons or making up a new dance. You decided that learning has more value to you than a cartoon or a dance... at least for now!

Questions

Besides money, name two things you make choices about: _____

What is opportunity cost? _____

What is a choice you made today? _____

What was the opportunity cost of your choice? _____
